

|                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| msCI passing 1 | CI Use this package to easily convert various time formats to milliseconds. Examples ms('2 days') // 172800000ms('1d') // 86400000ms('10h') // 36000000ms('2.5 hrs') // 9000000ms('2h') // 7200000ms('1m') // 60000 2                                                              | ms('5s') // 5000ms('1y') // 31557600000ms('100') // 100ms('-3 days') // -259200000ms('-1h') // -3600000ms('-200') // -200 Convert from Milliseconds ms(60000) // "1m"ms(2 * 60000) // "2m" 3                                                                                       | ms(-3 * 60000) // "-3m"ms(ms('10 hours')) // "10h" Time Format Written-Out ms(60000, { long: true }) // "1 minute"ms(2 * 60000, { long: true }) // "2 minutes" 4                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| 8                                               | 7 2. Link the package to the global module directory: npm link3. Within the module you want to test your local development instance of ms, just link it to the dependencies: npm link ms. Instead of the default one from npm, Node.js will now use your clone of ms!As always, you can run the tests using: npm test 7 | 6 Related Packages If you pass a string with a number and a valid unit, the number of equivalent milliseconds is returned ms,macro - Run ms as a macro at build-time. Caught a Bug? 1. Fork this repository to your own GitHub account and then clone it to your local device 6 | 5 Features ms(-3 * 60000, { long: true }) // "-3 minutes"ms(ms('10 hours'), { long: true }) // "10 hours" Works both in Node.js and in the browser If a number is supplied to ms, a string with a unit is returned If a string that contains the number is supplied, it returns it as a number (e.g.: it returns 100 for '100') 5 |
| 9                                               | 10                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 11                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 12                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| 16                                              | 15                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 14                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 13                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |